ALTERNATIVE BEHAVIOR MODIFICATION TECHNIQUE

JOB CARD GROUNDING

An effective parenting technique to reduce arguing, noncompliance, and family rule infraction by requiring the child to earn their way off of grounding by completing a job, rather than simply waiting for time to pass.

- Effective with most children 8 years of age and older
- Alternative method of discipline with children who are on the Autism Spectrum
- Can be used with all children in the family

Similar to Time Out but more effective for Pre-Adolescents and Adolescents

Clarifies boundaries of undesirable behavior creating stability and consistency

Gives the control of the frequency and duration of the discipline to the adolescent

Creates independence and teaches “cause and effect” principles

Overall, Limits power struggles with children and time focused on negative behaviors, thus reducing Parent frustration!
What is Job Card Grounding?
- A method of discipline that can demonstrates the boundaries of inappropriate behavior and the consequences that accompany their behavior. The child’s duration of grounding is contingent upon that child completing a chore or job.

What are the Benefits?
- Similar to time out but more effective with adolescents
- Gives the control of the frequency and duration of the discipline to the adolescent
- Gives the adolescent independence but also teaching the basic principles of cause and effect
- Child must display constructive and appropriate behavior in order to gain privileges
- Eliminates power struggles with children and the time wasted on negative behaviors. Many children are reinforced through nagging or arguing, thus this reduces inappropriate reinforcement
- Provides opportunities for effective positive reinforcement

What does grounding entail?
- Child must attend school
- Perform required typical chores
- Follow house rules
- Stay in room unless eating, working on chores, or attending school
- No use of electronics
- No hanging out with friends
- No snacks
- No social activities

STEPS FOR IMPLEMENTATION

1. Develop house rules with every member present and providing input (e.g., be respectful, or comply with requests from parents)
2. Create 10-15 different job cards that could be completed in less than 15 minutes.
3. Develop a list of privileges that the children would be motivated to earn
4. Provide the child with a warning when behavior is close to violating house rule, utilizing an “if-then” statement
5. If child continues to break house rule, calmly with short explanation, inform the child which rule was broken and provide a job card
6. If child continues to break the house rules, provide another job card
7. The child remains grounded until the job is completed.
8. When the child completes the job, provide appropriate positive reinforcement through verbal praise or occasional special privilege.
RULES FOR JOB CARD GROUNDING IMPLEMENTATION

1. All family members, especially the child with whom this will be most used, should provide input into the development of the house rules.

2. Everyone must understand what each house rule entails and an example of how it could be violated.

3. Every job should be discussed prior to implementation, to ensure the child can complete it with accuracy.

4. Every job should only take 15 minutes or less and should be a job that is not essential to be completed right away, if the child chooses to wait to complete it and remain grounded.

5. The list of special privileges should be things that the child would not normally have access to and are motivating for the child. You may need to have different ideas for each child. You can involve the child in the creation of this list. Create privileges for various levels of reinforcement.

6. Especially in the beginning, provide the child with a warning before administering a job card. This will help the child to understand the rules better and to have an opportunity to display the desired behavior. The warning should be in the form of an “if-then” statement such as, “If you don’t turn off the video games right now, like I asked you to, then you will receive a job card”. The warning allows you to minimize the use of job cards, thus making them more effective. It is essential that the parent follows through with their warning if the child does not comply. There are times when a warning may not be appropriate because the behavior was so severe or problematic. During these instances, it would be appropriate to just administer the job card.

7. When administering the job card, the parent must remain calm and concisely describe the behavior that broke a specific house rule. The parent should not engage in further dialogue with the child, even if the child tries to argue against it. Most offenses require only one job card; however, two or more jobs may be given if the behavior is more problematic. Do not allow the child to have more than 4 job cards at one time. Large amounts of job cards may seem like an overwhelming task for the child and they may just choose to remain grounded.
8. An alternative option for severe behavior is a “time-based” job card grounding procedure. This entails the child drawing 5 cards per day for a specified period of time (usually 3 to 10 days) to earn basic privileges. Considering that serious behaviors usually involve consequences outside of the home, it would be best to limit the basic privileges to inside the home (i.e. cell phone, television, computer/Ipad, or video games). Once the five jobs are completed, they have access to those privileges for the rest of the day. The next day they must complete 5 more jobs before they can get privileges. This should ONLY be done with very severe behaviors.

9. If the child continues to break house rules after a job card was administered, the parent may present another warning. If the behavior continues, the child will be given another job card. Do not administer more than 6 job cards in one day.

10. Inform the child that they remain grounded until their job is completed. During this time, the parent needs to enforce the grounding, even when it is inconvenient for them. The parent may not nag the child to complete the job, as it is in the child’s control as to when they would like to terminate their grounding. The grounding could last for 15 minutes or up to 3 days and longer.

11. As soon as the child completes the job or chore, determine whether the job was done correctly and thoroughly. If yes, provide positive reinforcement through verbal praise. If no, instruct the child what further tasks they need to complete.

12. It is essential that you do not talk about the problematic behavior after giving them the job card. This means that once the job or chore has been completed, the problematic behavior is forgiven and forgotten.

13. At the end of the day, provide one of the special privileges if the goal has been achieved. In the beginning, you can provide reinforcement (i.e. special privileges) if the child received 2 or fewer job cards in one day. Once that becomes easy for the child, reduce the goal to 1 or fewer job cards in a day. Then move to every two days and so on. The objective is to increase the goal so you fade out the special privileges over time and the child just maintains their positive behavior through natural reinforcement.
When it does not seem to be working

- Does the child understand all of the family rules and what type of behavior earns them a job card?
- Is the adolescent getting job cards for minor behaviors that violate family rules?
- Do you give too many warnings before job cards? (i.e. more than 1 an hour)
- Is your voice neutral when you administer the job card? (i.e. no yelling, lecturing, or discussion)
- Are you consistent with the amount of job cards given for each type of behavior? Are the job cards selected randomly?
- Are you suspending ALL privileges when they are grounded?
Do you check to make sure the chores are done correctly before the child regains privileges?

Is the daily environment in your home rewarding? Is the child missing out on fun enjoyable things when grounded?

Do you avoid nagging the child about their behavior after the chore is over?

Do you provide special privileges when the child reaches the predetermined goals?

Do you stay under the maximum of 6 job cards a day?
